

Excerpt from Theodore, or the Skeptics Conversion, Vol. 2 of 2: History of the Culture of a Protestant Clergyman They had been obliged to deceive Theodore about the situation of affairs. When the surgeon, on the day of the engagement, hastened to examine the wound of Theodore, the enemy had already mastered an important post in front of the army, and those acquainted with war considered the battle as certainly lost. John, who accompanied the surgeon, communicated to him this intelligence, which he had received from one of the superior officers, and asked him whether his friend could be removed, without danger, to the rear, in order to save him from being taken prisoner. The surgeon thought that it might be done, and John immediately made preparations for that purpose. He also advised the nobleman to leave his castle, or at least to convey his family to a place of security, which he did on the same day.
